PART ONE.

Mme. Maud Powell, called by many the greatest American violinist regardss of sex, died yesterday in a hotel in town to give a concert, but suddenly became ill on Wednesday and was unable to appear. For some time she had not been in the best of health. About a month ago she fainted at a concert in St. Louis and was unable to finish her

No American musician did more to help the cause of serious music in this country than Nime. Powell, who for than thirty years has been ravelling continually from one end of he country to the other appearing in ecitals of violin music.

Her earlier training was with William Lewis in Chicago. When she was thirteen she decided to go to Europe. Before this time she had played first violin in an orchestra in which she was the only woman. From Chicago she went to Leipzig, where she entered the Conservatory and became a pupil of Professor Schradel.

Her progress was very rapid. While at the Conservatory she played in various concerts and received a diploma at the end of one year. Her stay in Germany, however, was brief. She wanted to know the methods of all countries where violin playing was well developed, so she went to Paris. Here she found that there were twelve vacancies at the Paris Conservatoire. From eighty candidates she was accepted for one of the places. She entered the class of Mr. Dancla, whose pupil

He complimented her for "not being a prodigy." Shq was already an artist, he told her, in spite of her youth. He advised her to go to Berlin to study at the close of her English contract, and she followed his advice, going to the Royal Conservatory, where she studied for a year with Joachim himself.

After having spent four years abroad she returned to America with letters of recommendation from famous musicians and diplomas from three famous schools. Soon after her return she played for Theodore Thomas and was immediately engaged for a series of concerts in New York and on tour. She made her New York and on tour.
